CYTOKINE

A single source to keep you up-to-date in this rapidly expanding field

The explosion of cytokine research in the 1980's has begun to elucidate the role that cytokines play in cancer, AIDS, autoimmunity and the immune response to infection. Traditionally, research reports in this interdisciplinary field have been scattered throughout a broad spectrum of biomedical journals. Now, Cytokine, a new bimonthly international journal, provides you with comprehensive coverage of the field in a single source: latest advances, current results, implications for your own research and clinical applications.

An authoritative forum for investigators

Cytokine brings you critical information at the leading edge of cytokine research. Prominent investigators from both the academic and industrial sectors publish original high-quality papers on recent research and new developments. One of the journal's primary goals is to encourage and facilitate quality communication among different specialty groups.

Timely coverage

Rapid dissemination of information is a priority. Articles are published within only three to four months of submission, so you know the information is current.

Comprehensive coverage

Cytokine covers all cytokines including interleukins, cytotoxins, hematopoietic factors, transforming growth factors, interferons, and other known or new cytokines. Articles covering any aspect of basic or applied cytokine research are considered including: molecular genetics, gene expression, biochemistry, phylogeny, pathophysiology, and diagnostic or clinical applications.

Original articles and special features you'll look forward to with each issue of Cytokine

Cytokine brings you a wealth of quality information, featuring:

- Original articles—definitive original research articles by leading authorities
- Short papers—a vehicle for rapid publication, often focusing on original and genuine advances to methodology as applied to cytokines.
- Review articles and mini-reviews—state-of-the-art reviews commissioned from recognized authorities on the most rapidly developing areas of cytokine research
- Meeting abstracts—timely notification of results presented at important international conferences
- Letters to the Editor—a lively, yet scholarly forum for the exchange of views and information with members of your peer group.
